"How Britain Prepared."

Charles Urban's moving pictures show ing "How Britain Prepared" are drawing unusual audiences to the Belasco Theater, argely due to the special interest aroused by the Mexican trouble and the fact that these pictures, many of them new since the last exhibition here, cover minute details of the British mobilization since the war in Europe began. Some of them show what the women of Great Britain are doing in the way of materially help-jing themselves and their government in ing themselves and their government in the struggle.

There is a local interest in the exhibition, also, due to the fact that Miss Valerie Padelford, granddaughter of the late Gen. Albert Ordway, the famous organizer of the National Guard of the District of Columbia, and the members of the Military Service Legion are busily engaged in selling tickets for the exhibition, through the hotels and otherwise, upon which they receive a concession of a part of the proceeds for the benefit of those dependent upon the District men who are now called to the front.

The story is based primarily on the bohemiansm of studio life among portraitures, ism of studio life among portrattures, depicting their social relations, their pleasures and sorrows and the rivalry of artists. In "The American Beauty" Myttle Steadman will be pictured in three different roles, first as a young wife, then in a series of dramatic scenes in which she plays two different roles alternately. The contrast in the different characters is great and it is "farewell" across the footlights Saturday evening, at the final performance.

Interprets Spirit of 76.

The play interprets the spirit of the times during the revolutionary periodthe times that tried men's souls. Many good Americans of today have the imression that the fathers were a unit in declaring their independence of Great Britain, but it was only after a long and earnest debate that they adopted the Declaration of Independence. The drama pictures in dramatic style the heroic scenes in the Continental Congress during the debates for and against American independence.

Judge Tallman, United States land commissioner, plays the part of Gen. Washington. His bodyguard will be composed of a detail of officers from the Minute Men of this city, under Col. M. A. Winter, in what is probably the best representation of colonial officers' uniforms ever seen on a public occasion by in declaring their independence of
